And we're so totally bringing the Cowboy. I will twist his arm myself. I don't care how squeamish he is. Or how vanilla he thinks his Thing Of The Week is. Because we're taking Wonder Woman to the Vaudeville, baby. And if he misses it, he will regret it. Maybe not today, and maybe not tomorrow. But soon, and for the rest of his life.

(They have $2.00 Schlitz after midnight. That's so horrible, even he might not drink it. They also have a stuffed unicorn. And wait until we show WW the taxidermied frogs. Bring earplugs.)

Burlesque... and hot sauce? That could be scary.

And I bet WW already knows about the frogs. I tol' ya, she's been to magic shows there. She prob'lly knows the bartender by first name because, you know, WW.

And they still make Schlitz? Eeeuuw!

Arriving early is a good idea. It's a small venue, you want to stake out territory early on.

Last show I went to there, part of my party ended up behind a pillar. After the intermission we decided that friendliness was the better part of community activity, and managed to get everyone into better positions.

Some of them even watched the show.

(side note: burlesque is strange when viewed from a gallery)

Considering the ill grace and intolerance with which he bears Duke's discourses on the history of the Coors company, no, probably not.

But you have to admit, based on the flyers, he'll love the show. Even if he won't admit it to a living soul.

Hot sauce and burlesque... I am having trouble getting both these into the same mental frame without whimpering.

I see they also have a pizza eating contest on Wednesday. You know, I don't believe that would be allowed in this country, for reasons of health and safety and people choking from eating too fast.

Bet metabolic disorders are considered cheating, though.

Besides, there's the matter of speed and athleticism. One has to be able to do it fast.

A fair point, and one I will happily concede in the name of encouraging better table manners everywhere. Plus, having to be Heimlich-ed in a public place does nothing for one's composure or image. And one's friends could conceivably never allow it to be lived down.
